

Co-Existing with Backyard Wildlife in the Crescenta Valley

Who shares your backyard when you're not there? What are they doing? How are you attracting wildlife? Is it safe to share your backyard with wildlife? Do you have pets in the yard? Are they safe? How can you deter wildlife humanely if it's encroaching too closely? And what about your fence?

We'll answer these questions and talk about issues like why the new wildlife crossing over the 101 is so important, how we can prevent coyote "attacks" at local parks, what wildlife rehabilitation means and more, as we explore the wide world of urban wildlife here in the Los Angeles area.

Our speaker is Dana Stangel, a Biology teacher and Urban Wildlife Specialist with Teranga Ranch. She conducts backyard wildlife consultations, hosts public presentations, and organizes educational field trips to learn about and observe native wildlife.

Teranga Ranch is a wildlife education organization educating Californians about local wildlife, teaching us how to coexist. Dana goes to schools, home owners association meetings, and holds community meetings when there is a perceived wildlife issue, like coyotes. Dana will bring humane hazing devices to pass out and will discuss humane alternatives to poison, traps and guns.
